KNELT IN THE DEPOT.

Boys Traveling with Uncle Insist on Saying Their Prayers.

"When I pray, I don't stand up or sit or sit down—I kneel down!"

That was the ultimatum delivered in the waiting room of the Union depot last night by Albert Williamson, 6 years old, to his uncle, John Madison, Jr., of Herrin, Ill. On the other side of Mr. Madison, his second nephew, Herbert Williamson, 4 years old, nodded a grave and dignified assent.

"But, boys, don't you know people don't pray when they're traveling—you can't pray in a depot. Nobody ever does." And the uncle glanced helplessly toward the idle "red cap," the alert old lady and the busy man and woman who occupied the corner of the waiting room—a corner he had selected as being the most quiet on the second floor.

"We promised mamma we would pray every night before we went to sleep," Albert answered. "And it doesn't make any difference where we are, we've got to do it."

"Or we won't go to sleep," Herbert continued the argument logically.

Mr. Madison looked at his watch. It was 9:40 o'clock. He looked at his neighbors, and they were all looking at him.

"We will get on the sleeping car in two hours," he said. "You say your prayers then."

"I don't want to say them then—I want to say mine now," Herbert replied firmly.

"And then you will have to do it all over again when we get on the train."

"No, we say them only once every night," Albert explained, "and if you want us to go to sleep, Uncle John, we had better let us say them here. Herbert is something awful when he wants to go to sleep and can't."

"So are you!" Herbert replied beligerently. Then—"I—I think I'm going to cry, Uncle John!"

And that's how it happened that two fervent young men clasped their hands devoutly on the top of a certain old Union depot seat back at 9:50 o'clock last night and repeated: "Now I lay me down to sleep, without a falter. Then they dropped down, and with a few drowsy words of "Good night" were asleep.

"You see, it's this way," their Uncle John explained. "Every time I don't let them have their own way they set up a howl my folks back in Kiowa, Col., can hear; so what can I do?"

"My sister had them out there this summer, while she and I were visiting our mother, Mrs. J. L. Madison, and she had to go back suddenly to our home in Herrin. That left me to bring the boys. They are not bad, my no—only determined, and always thirsty and hungry. I bought them 65 cents' worth of candy and fruit coming from Colorado and carried them a little less than 25 drinks of water. And the praying! Their father is a minister. Herbert Williamson of Herrin."

Herbert stirred uneasily. "Uncle John," he murmured. "I want a drink."—Kansas City Times.

Fire Dangers From Hunting.

State Forester Rane calls the attention of Gov. Draper to the tinder-box character of the woods at this time, because of the extended and unrelieved drouth, and the danger that is incurred by the opening of the hunting season. Already some 35 forest fires appear to have resulted from the carelessness of gunners, and more and more are to be feared. The governor has the authority to declare a closed season on hunting of all kinds when just such conditions exist as are now present, but he is not disposed to exercise that authority just yet. He is content for the present to "warn all as to the danger of the use of firearms in the forests at this time, and trust that a realization of the danger of fire because of the drouth will preclude the necessity of such action on my part." This action is of the kindly tentative sort. When weighed in the balance of the public weal one serious forest fire is more to be deplored than the loss of all the gunning in sight. But let the shooters—and how can they be reached?—be mighty careful, if they must have the risk. Springfield, Mass., Republican.

A Slap at Redmond.

The way the legislature put the kibosh on the bill asking for an office rent appropriation for the public service commission is regarded not so much a rap at the commission itself as at its chairman, John E. Redmond. In addition to being at the head of this commission, Mr. Redmond is reporter of decisions for the supreme court, and incidentally carries on an extensive and presumably lucrative law practice in Newport. From his two public offices he receives something like $3,000 a year, and while this is not a princely income there is widespread opinion that it ought to be sufficient to secure Mr. Redmond's entire time for state work, at least that he might maintain the office of the commission at Montpelier, the only proper place for the headquarters of any state department. We do not blame the legislators for feeling unwilling to provide a suite of offices for a commission whose chairman is holding down two state jobs and conducting a private business at the same time. Neither do we blame Mr. Redmond for doing this triple stint if he can carry it off. Two hundred and fifty dollars a year, for instance, if it depends on one's sense of the fitness of things. Of course a great many people would not have sufficient faith in their own ability at rendering faithful service to think of holding two public offices at least one of which is important enough to demand the entire time of an ordinarily intelligent mortal, but such lack of self-confidence seems never to have troubled Mr. Redmond.—Brattleboro Reformer.

Publicity, Publicity.

There are several bills before the legislature looking to the establishment of some kind of a publicity bureau for the state. It is agreed that something of this sort is necessary.

What Vermont's many attractions need more than anything else is an active campaign of promotion by systematic advertising. Advertising pays. Publicity is beneficiary.

Vermont's advantages as a national playground for summer tourists have just begun to be realized. Thousands of dollars are ours for the asking in this direction, and yet Vermont is more than a fertile pasture lot where the nation's colts are let out to graze.

In a practical talk on forestry and conservation at Lyndonville the other night, Prof. W. E. Howard of Middlebury said that one industrious farmer, earning a year-round competence from the soil, is worth more to the state than a dozen flitting summer guests, even though they leave a golden trail behind them. The golden trail is ideal and poetical. In real fact the trail is too often nothing but a cloud of dust.

If the state becomes merely a playground for the prosperous and aggressive people of other parts of the country, like other play things, it is liable to be cast aside at any time.

Vermont's future success and progress will depend upon work and not upon play. When we mean real business, we will fill the farms, conserve the forests, educate the children, build the smokestacks, develop the quarries, and the automobile paths and game preserves will come as logically and as naturally as a school boy's dimer and game of pull-a-war at noon time.

Vermont's real value, to her own people as well as to the rest of the world, needs to be constantly emphasized. Intelligent publicity is beneficial for the firm or individual. It is just as good for the state.—St. Johnsbury Republican.

The Worthless Dog.

It appears that the dog bill comes up in the legislature Tuesday. We sincerely hope that some action will be taken in the interest of Vermont. It is no matter of guess; no matter of doubt, that the "worthless dog" is a source of damage to the state and a great cost to its people. The useless dog is not only costly, but he is always a nuisance. Such dogs should be removed as a menace to all the people of the state.

There are dogs of good breeding and education which are undoubtedly of practical value on the farm and of sentimental value in the household. But the dog that is a continual annoyance to neighbors and travelers and a destroyer of property should be removed. The faithful watch dog, the pleasant companion, should be guarded with care from all danger of "return to the wild," because the longing for blood always remains in the common dog. He should be kept home at night; and his owner should give bond that his dog shall not destroy property of his neighbors.

The matter is a very simple one. No man, we assume, will keep any animal in such manner that it can destroy his neighbor's property. Every honest man and good neighbor ought to be willing, therefore, to give a bond to pay such damage as his animal may commit. The bond costs nothing if the dog does no damage. Moreover, in the opinion of The News, the dog tax should be largely increased. Such a tax would automatically decrease the curs which infest the state.

We hope the legislature will deal wisely with Governor Mead's recommendation on this extremely important subject. In 1890, Vermont had 770,000 sheep; in 1890, 446,000; in 1890, 334,000; in 1900, 182,000. The same percentage of decrease in the last decade would leave only about 109,000. In all this period wool was protected by the high tariff. Lack of government protection was not the cause of this progressive decrease in sheep. What, then, was the cause? Read Governor Mead's message again on "The Worthless Dog."—Burlington News.

A New Method Granite Paving.

A new method of paving with granite blocks is being tried in Brooklyn, the invention of a Baltimore contractor, Edward Alcott. A trial strip of the pavement has been laid in front of the post office, and will be tested for a year.

Alcott has pound blocks, or "keys," of West Virginia white oak, and lays these in rows between strips of the granite blocks now used. The old blocks were set in sand and the continual traffic eventually has them turned and twisted in the street, while the tops become rounded and afford poor foothold for horses. When the tops get rounded the blocks are taken up and carried off to the curbers, and new blocks are laid. In laying the new pavement, Alcott used 60 per cent. of the old rounded granite blocks, and took up the other 40 per cent. of the street space with his white oak keys, placing alternate rows of blocks and keys. The latter have concave sides, and between them and the sides of the blocks is poured tar. The life of the key is ten years, Alcott says. The cost of laying the pavement under the Alcott method is $1.50 a yard, against $3 a yard where the old style blocks alone are used. The level of the keys is below the level of the granite blocks when the pavement is first laid, so that traffic smooths off the rounded tops of the old blocks. Alcott says he can make the average life of the block 50 years, thus redeeming these blocks to the city and at the same time laying the pavement at almost half cost. The cost of labor is slightly more, for takers men can lay 90 yards of the old blocks while they are laying only 75 of the new pavement, but Alcott points out that this difference in the cost of labor is trivial compared with the cost of the material and the redemption of the old blocks. Alcott claims that his pavement affords a much better foothold for the horses, and that the noise of traffic is lessened by two-thirds.—From Stone.

RIGHT BREATHING.

Insure Good Health by Using Lungs Liberally.

There are some persons who believe that by right breathing all sorts of troubles and diseases can be cured. There is not a shadow of doubt that correct and deep breathing helps us to preserve our health. If young persons would keep this in mind and try deep breathing they would find that as they grow older they would not have the ailments that beset many persons to-day. Of course, it is out of the question to suggest to you that you breathe very deeply while you lie in bed in the morning, or after you go to bed at night, for in the morning you are not even half awake until after 8, when you are half dressed and when you touch the pillow at night you are as good as asleep. If you can remember to do it then, take long, full breaths from the very bottom of your breathing apparatus. Breathe slowly. As soon as you exhaust one breath, let it out slowly until your body feels empty.

Do this a number of times while your bedroom window is open and fresh air fills the room. Try to make the breath come from your abdomen and go into your abdomen. Try to make the breath come from your stomach and go into your stomach. Try to make the breath come from the small of your back and go into the small of your back. Try to make it come from the ends of your fingers and the ends of your toes. If you cannot do this in bed, think of it while you are out in the fresh air and take deep breaths whenever you can. Fill every cranny of your body with freshness and life. If you remember to do this every day, it will keep you in good condition so that you will not take cold easily, so that your digestion will not be easily upset, so that you will be always in condition to go coasting or to eat a big dinner of goodies.—Chicago News.

True, Oh, Very True!

"Children," said the minister, addressing the Sunday school, "I want to talk to you a few moments about one of the most important organs in the whole world. What is it that throbs away, beats away, never stopping, never ceasing, whether you wake or sleep, night and day, week in and week out, month in and month out, year in and year out, without any volition on your part, hidden away, as it were, in the depths, unseen by you, throbbing, throbbing rhythmically all your life long?"

And during the pause of oratorical effect came a small voice: "The gas meter."—Everybody's Magazine.

Life Insurance or Death Insurance—Which?

"People willingly pay large sums for life insurance, which is really death insurance; but real life insurance frequently consists in taking Eckman's Alternative."

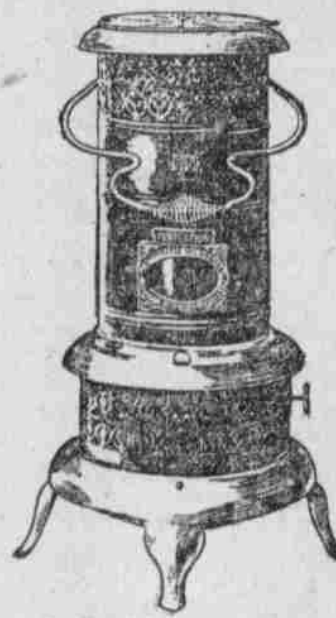

Can any "lung sick" person afford not to take the Alternative? It sharpens the appetite, makes life look different, brings better health with greater ease. Often persons are so much improved that they can work even before they are really cured. Investigate it. If you are broad minded enough to believe that there can be a cure for Consumption which has not been rationally exploited, or which is not based merely on climate or diet restrictions. Mr. Webb's report for Consumption.

Gentlemen: "During 1905, my physician sent me to Texas, where I went to Colorado. I became worse and was sent home to die. I heard of Eckman's Alternative, began treatment, and was cured. I earnestly recommend Eckman's wonderful cure for Consumption." (Signed) EDWARD ALCOCK, BRONCHITIS, Asthma, Hay Fever, Throat and Lung Affections.
